Wild BEAUTY:

Tatjana Patitz
and the Mustangs of America

In a quest to get back to my equine roots, I recently began delving into ways that I could become involved in volunteer work specifically around horses. As I began my research, I soon learned that the very existence of wild horses in America was severely threatened with ongoing mass removals by the Federal government under the orders of both previous administrations and now Interior Secretary, Ken Salazar.

As I began to look at various charitable organizations, one site kept capturing my attention. Two and a half hours outside of Los Angeles, nestled in the bucolic setting of Santa Barbara County, exists one very special safe haven for the Wild Mustang horses of America - the Return to Freedom Sanctuary.

As with many of my best ideas, I filed this one away among the ever-increasing list of things to do when, eventually, I have the space needed to dedicate myself wholly and utterly. Some time had passed when fate intervened in the most unexpected way and in the shape of one of the
